

Priests receive crash-course in fertility

■ By Sylvia Defendi

Dr Amanda Lamont of Perth's FertilityCare in Yokine believes that it is becoming ever more important for couples to become aware of the excellent services being offered by Natural Fertility Services (NFS).

As part of an ongoing awareness campaign FertilityCare hosted an information session for priests on October 25.

Eleven priests attended the session where Dr Jing Man Wong presented information regarding the many uses of NaProTechnology; FertilityCare practitioners Nga Nguyen and Linley Plowman presented a summary of the information usually given to women and couples at their introductory session and Dr Lamont presented some introductory information regarding FertilityCare and NaProTechnology, while giving some real-life examples demonstrating how these services have helped women and couples around the world.

"Priests often tell me that couples seek their advice and guidance regarding their fertility, whether the couple is having trouble conceiving or whether they are blessed with abundant fertility.

"A priest can offer the spiritual guidance, pastoral care and support that people need in this situation, and they can also refer the woman or couple to an appropriate service for practical assistance," said Dr Lamont, who plans to host more sessions for priests in the future.

One of many Natural Fertility Services, FertilityCare opened on September 29 to couples wanting to conceive naturally and women wanting a deeper understanding of their reproductive health.
